Detailed description of content	Urban myths and realities This advance study seminar focuses on the city and the multiplicity of forms that development takes in cities. In recent years, the world has become primarily urban. Across the world cities are becoming increasingly unequal and the dominant form of settlement is informal. The course engages the dominant approaches to cities today. And discuss what goes right, what goes wrong, and why, in an attempt to explain why cities are in the normative mess they are in? While looking at central issues and development challenges through the lens of the city, the course addresses wider issues of progress and inequality. Cities have been described as engines of progress and drivers of change, while simultaneously acting as difference machines. These simultaneous and contradictory characteristics produce cities as unfinished and dynamic. Put shortly, the course engages the myths and realities of contemporary urban life in order to make sense of one of the most pressing development challenges today.
