activitytype	master course
Teaching language	English
Registration	Tilmelding sker via STADS-Selvbetjening indenfor annonceret tilmeldingsperiode, som du kan se på Studieadministrationens hjemmeside. Når du tilmelder dig kurset, skal du være opmærksom på, om der er sammenfald i tidspunktet for kursusafholdelse og eksamen med andre kurser, du har valgt. Uddannelsesplanlægningen tager udgangspunkt i, at det er muligt at gennemføre et anbefalet studieforløb uden overlap. Men omkring valgfrie elementer og studieplaner som går ud over de anbefalede studieforløb, kan der forekomme overlap, alt efter hvilke kurser du vælger. Registration through STADS-Selvbetjening within the announced registration period, as you can see on the Studyadministration homepage. When registering for courses, please be aware of the potential conflicts between courses or exam dates on courses. The planning of course activities at Roskilde University is based on the recommended study programs which do not overlap. However, if you choose optional courses and/or study plans that goes beyond the recommended study programs, an overlap of lectures or exam dates may occur depending on which courses you choose. Ved for få tilmeldte aflyses kurset. In case of too few registrations, the course will be cancelled.
Detailed description of content	The topic of the course is discourse analysis as a tool to study and understand politics and governance in a European and global context. The aim of the course is twofold: (A) to take stock of discourse analysis as a tool to study politics and governance and especially (B) to supply guidelines for carrying out discourse analysis to advance our understanding of politics and governance in a European and global context. The interest in discourse analytical approaches to politics has grown considerable since the late 1990s in Europe and beyond. While much ground has been covered conceptually, empirically, and some in terms of the development of analytical frameworks, there are still significant challenges to discourse analysis as an approach to the study of governance and politics. This includes how discourse analytical approaches 'speak' to other types of theoretical and analytical frameworks directed at the study of politics and governance, how we can further develop our research designs and ultimately improve our understanding of the of politics and governance. These are the foci of this course. The course has a hand-on approach to analysing discourse. In addition to of brief presentations by the lectures, the course is largely based on class and group discussions, exercises and student presentations.
Expected work effort (ECTS-declaration)	Class teaching 20 hours Student presentations in groups and peer-review: 25 hours Preparation: 50 hours Examination: 40 hours (repetition and the actual exam) Hours – total: 135 hours
Course material and Reading list	The course literature will consist of key journal articles and a few additional book chapters including: Hay, C. and Rosamond, B. (2002) Globalization, European integration and the discursive construction of economic imperatives, Journal of European Public Policy, Vol. 9, No. 2, pp. 147-167.

Learning outcomes and assessment criteria

- Knowledge and understanding:

Knowledge and understanding of academic and/or practice-oriented methodologies, their use and relevance at an advanced level.

- Being able to understand and critically reflect upon academic and/or scientifically based practice-oriented methods in the field of social science research and how they are used in the students' future careers as, for example, lecturers, project managers, consultants, managers or researchers
- Skills:

Carrying out studies and analyses with the aid of academic and/or scientifically grounded practice-oriented methods

- Evaluating and selecting methods from research-related and professional practices
- Being able to communicate and discuss academic and/or scientifically based practice-oriented studies in a type of language that is correct, clear, professionally accurate, well-structured and well-argued
- Competences:

Co-operation with colleagues in the application of various academic and/or scientifically based practice-oriented methods and forms of analysis in relation to relevant issues in research and professional contexts

- Reflection on one's own learning and taking responsibility for one's own professional development

Overall
content

- Research and professional premises for academic and scientifically based practice-oriented analyses.
- Approaches to the use of academic and/or scientifically based practice-oriented tools in research and professional contexts, respectively.

Content	Introduction / Kennet Lynggaard This session presents the basics of discourse analysis and what discourse analysis has and can be used for in the study of EU politics and governance. The main topics are: (1) what is discourse analysis? (2) what can and can't discourse analysis be used for? (3) how can we use discourse analysis to understand politics in an international context? (4) what is the distinctiveness of the discourse analytical approaches compared to interest-based approaches and (5) structure of the course.

Content	Discursive analytical strategy I: Foucault, Fairclough and Laclau/ Allan Dreyer Hansen This session introduces briefly to three central authors in discourse analysis, Foucault, Fairclough and Laclau resp. They share a set of assumptions which make it obvious to be inspired by all of them, yet there are certain ontological differences, which should not go unnoticed. In the session you are introduced to Foucault's archaeology of the human sciences and his historical genealogies of power; Fairclough's linguistic oriented Critical Discourse Analysis, and Laclau's discourse analysis with its focus on political hegemony. In this session, we look into the basic theoretical assumptions in the three positions.

Discursive analytical strategy II: Foucault, Fairclough and Laclau/ Allan Dreyer Hansen

In this session, we focus on the analytical differences and commonalities in the three positions. Some differences are mostly matters of focus, others of a more basic ontological/ theoretical kind. Despite such differences it is obvious to draw inspiration from all of them in establishing an analytical strategy.

Discourse Analysis as Research Strategy / Kennet Lynggaard

This session further elaborates on the distinctiveness of discourse analysis as a research strategy. Doing so we discuss the challenges associated with conducting discourse analysis, especially focusing on (3) agency-structure as a continuum (4) discursive conflict-consensus as a continuum (5) causality and causal mechanisms (6) comparative temporal analysis and (7) multi-theoretical analysis.

Discourse analysis: A History of Global Powers / Michelle Pace

This lecture will focus on how discourse analysis can assist in uncovering the hidden global processes at work in the making of the Middle East "Peace" Process or MEPP, that often remain camouflaged and poorly understood. We will first explore the background to this case and why it is a global issue and then nuance how discourse analysis helps understand the dilemmas and contradictions of external intervention in Palestine.

The strategic usage of discourse / Kennet Lynggaard

This session focuses on the strategic usage of discourse. As a case we look at the impact of European integration discourse on domestic politics and the use of 'Europe' for strategic purposes in national politics. The claim is, first, that European integration discourse has profound, but also very diverse impacts on politics across EU member states as well as on neighbouring countries. Second, discourse about 'Europe' is a powerful resource for national decision makers and have been used to initiate and implement a wide variety of national policy and institutional reforms. These topics are presented by means of a synthesis of existing conceptual developments and empirical research on the area as well as by including a focus on EU economic governance, particularly within the financial sector. The main topics are: (1) European integration discourse in domestic politics (2) the usage of 'Europe' for national reforms (3) Illustrations from the financial sector.

Content Visual discourse / Kennet Lynggaard

Images, symbols and physical objects are crucial in capturing what may be termed visual discourse. Political analysis is not a complete stranger to the use of images, symbols, physical objects and observations of actions as data. At the same time it is no doubt the least common sources of empirical evidence in political analysis. However, how visual objects and processes constructs and are constructed by the social world may well be relevant, even key, to capturing and understanding political discourse.

Content Discourse analysis and development/ Johan Fischer

Since the 1980s 'discourse' and discourse analysis have played major roles in international development studies. In many ways discourse became a buzzword that promised a novel approach to key topics including inequality, post-colonialism and power, to name a few. In effect, discourse to a large extent shaped what became known as post-development, that is, an increasingly critical approach to mainstream development understandings and practices. However, to this day the usefulness, applicability and effects of discourse and discourse analysis within the discipline are hotly debated topics and this lecture captures these debates and arguments over the last three decades.
