Detailed description of content	What is global consumer culture? Elective course: GS Advanced Study course with written assignments (also open to IDS students) 'Consumption' is a ubiquitous, yet strangely ambiguous and blurred concept in the modern globalized world. Consumption in a globalized world is a construction of identities and even the shape of the global connections between countries and North/South. Thus, consumption is a central concept in consumer culture, that is, social science approaches to consumption in a globalized world. The course develops students' ability to analyze different types of arguments and how these fit into classic and modern debates. The course is organized around four broad themes: consumption, globalization, identity and culture. Students will learn about theories, seminal studies and methodologies in classic and current consumer studies. In terms of empirical research, students will have opportunities in the field of consumer studies internationally – not least in the private sector.
