Learning outcomes and assessment criteria	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Knowledge at the highest international level of theoretical key concepts in the field of public finances (public goods, economic efficiency, equity, income, and welfare distribution, etc.).• Research-based knowledge of how activities that transcend common public administration and policy boundaries, especially Europeanisation and globalisation, affect these key concepts.• Knowledge of the interactions between national and transnational (especially EU) regulatory mechanisms that seek to influence public key economic concepts.• Analyse and reflect on developments in key concepts of public finances.• Assess the impact of different regulatory mechanisms on the public economy at different levels.• Select and pursue a relevant analytical angle on a practical research question in the area of the international public economy.• Responsibility for own professional development.• Be able, while under pressure, to assess a problem within the subject area and formulate relevant theoretical and empirical considerations on the content of the problem, further analysis and possible relevant actions.
Overall content	The course focuses on what increased activity and impact across national boundaries means for key concepts in the public economy (public goods, economic efficiency, equity, income, and welfare distribution, etc.). Traditionally, these concepts have been analysed and attempted to be managed from the national level, although the interplay between national and transnational levels increasingly challenges this logic. It is natural to look particularly at the importance of the European Union's political economy and the market economy mindset expressed in the Treaty of Rome and later in the Treaty of Lisbon. The link between the various key concepts will also be discussed in the course.

Teaching and working methods

The teaching alternates between lectures and exercises. After selected teaching sessions, students will prepare, individually or in groups, examples of exam questions based on the teaching and programme literature which will be on Moodle. Selected questions will subsequently be commented on by the lecturer. In addition, a full-day interdisciplinary workshop is included with the other two courses of the semester.
