ACADEMIC CONTENT

Overall objective This combined theory and practice course discusses how key social science theories are relevant to analyse and assess social enterprises and social entrepreneurship presenting a variety of perspectives and definitions in the field. The objective is for students to reflect and apply theories presented in analysis of cases. The course will introduce cases relevant to social change and transformation in political, economic, and institutional environments, which provide the context for the emergence of social entrepreneurship, social enterprise, social and solidarity economy, civil society organizations as well as new forms of responsible business.

Detailed description of content The course provides an understanding of social enterprise, social entrepreneurship, CSR and civil society organisations and their societal, political, and economic context. It gives an introduction to the field of SE and the various definitions and types of social enterprise and social entrepreneurship. To deepen the understanding of these, the course also engages with related key social science concepts, such as social and solidarity economy, social change and transformation, hybridity, commons and co-production, stakeholder, social capital and citizenship. The course encompasses a local and global perspective, but also presenting a North-South perspective as well as Danish cases related to the themes of the course.
