ACADEMIC CONTENT

Overall objective	A specialisation course aims to allow students to immerse themselves in the theories/theory lines and empirical issues pertaining to a particular subject area. The course equips students to competently select and argue for the applicability and relevance of a theory/theory line to given issues.

	The courses offered are based on the Institute's research in the field and knowledge of the highest international standard. The specific subject area of the courses will be described in the activity description. Advanced Study Seminars offers students insight for instance into how international politics impacts governance, how governance impacts politics, and what this means for the ability of international institutions, governments, and other organizations to help address current issues such as climate, environment, security, digitalization, and public health.
Detailed description of content	"What fundamental political and legal dilemmas do decision-makers and institutions face in modern democracies and welfare states? Although politics has never been more turbulent, and one crisis replaces the next, many of these debates are based on questions that have a long history in political thought and jurisprudence: Can the state effectively curb a pandemic without exceeding fundamental civil rights? Should gender equality be enforced within the private sphere only? What legitimacy does the nation state have if it stands in the way of addressing the climate crisis? This course develops students' ability to engage with the normative and legal dimensions of public policy and governance. Drawing on a mix of political and legal theory, and using a number of empirical cases, the course explores the key political and legal issues that arise in meeting contemporary challenges, how different priorities and values might be justified, and how this influences decision making. The aim is to develop academic skills in the reading of political and legal texts and the relating of those texts too ethical and political problems. In doing so, the course seeks to equip students with the ability to carry out normative analyses of concrete cases and to articulate, support and defend positions that draw on and deploy appropriate evidence, enabling them to make a qualified contribution to debates surrounding contemporary political and legal questions. In the first part of the course, we will examine some of the key theories of politics and justice: such as the liberalism, communitarianism, cultural pluralism, theories of authority and legitimacy, Marxism, feminism, nationalism and cosmopolitanism. This is done to understand their basic assumptions, values, objectives and forms of argumentation, as well as to understand the interrelationship between political theory and regimes of law and governance. In the second part of the course, we will examine the operation of these theories through an analysis of current case studies. The three main cases we will explore are policy responses to 1) the corona pandemic, 2) multiculturalism (group identity and discrimination) in the nation state, and 3) gender and equality policies. However, we will refer also to cases such as surveillance, climate change, nudging in public policy, economic equality, democracy and citizenship. In exploring such cases students will be required to address the practicalities involved, how the normative values involved can be used to guide policy decision-making and practice, building skills in analytical argument by exploring these issues "
