Overall content	The learning in the internship is achieved via a mix of practical tasks, reflections on the intersection between theory and practices and via the independent preparation of the internship project. The preparation of the internship project takes place under the supervision of an internship supervisor.
Teaching and working methods	The student is responsible for securing an internship position and the practical matters associated with the internship, including ensuring that both the work tasks at business/organisation and the commitments to the university are completed. The internship must be pre-approved by the Board of Studies before it is started. It is expected that the work efforts of the semester are distributed at ¾ of the time at the internship and ¼ at the university (equivalent to approx. 540-600 hours at the place of internship and approx. 200 hours at the university). The main activities of the intern are to be described and fall within the subject fields of both Global Studies and International Development Studies. The student holds obligations to both subjects. Internship project The internship project's research question must relate to theoretical or empirical issues from Global Studies and International Development Studies, which the stay with the internship host (or the host's activities) provides an opportunity to study, but is otherwise freely selected by the student. Students are encouraged to focus on research questions where aspects of International Development Studies can come into play. The completed internship project that is individually prepared must include:

1. An executive summary not exceeding 4,800 characters in length, including spaces. The summary must take into account the contents of the project and the significant points that a reader should be aware of.
2. A main part: including a mandatory literature review, which provides an overview of the most recent research in the academic field that the internship project deals with (state of the art literature review). The literature for the project consists of a total of 650 pages selected by the student in collaboration with the supervisor.
